Now, NES players have a Mighty good reason to Fight.

When the Mad Gear Gang kidnaps Jessica, Mike Haggard, Cody and Guy must survive 5 deadly levels full of punks, wrestlers and samurai swordsmen to rescue her. Their weapons: knives, throwing stars and giant hammers. Their fighting moves: Haggard's famous jumping pile driver, Cody's unstoppable uppercut, and Guy's lethal flashkick. If you have to pick one fight on your NES, this one's a real knockout.

Haggard gets the jump on a goon with his big-flying jump kick.

Few opponents are up for the damage of Cody's devastating uppercut.

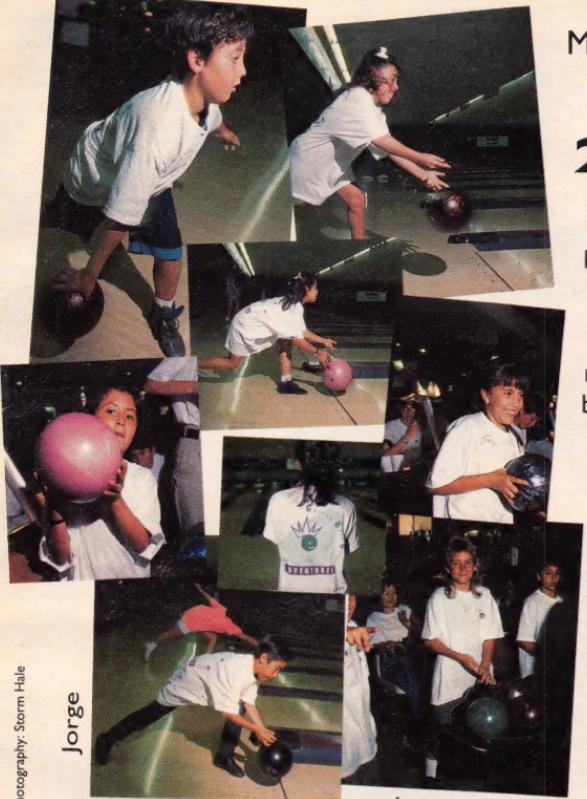

A bottomless pit awaits the victim of Guy's flashkick.

MAD ABOUT D.A.

I'm simply mad about your totally, awesomely rad magazine. When my subscriptions to your magazine and to Cricket ran out, my mom said to pick one. It was quite a choice, but I chose yours. It was worth it.

Radio Freeman

Jimmy Freeman's just 12 years old, but his job title is way impressive: Star DJ and the Official Vice President of Fun at Radio AHHS. This Minnesota-based, all-kids station is heard around the country every day. Jimmy got the job after auditioning with a group of 30 other kids. We caught him between shows to get the lowdown.

In the radio booth: I'm part of the Radio AHHS Air Force—that's what the kid DJs are called. During the show we talk, look at things in the paper, tell the kids about the music coming up. We have Braingames—we ask a question and kids call in to win a prize. While the music is on we answer the phone and act silly.

Best on-air moment: I got to meet Mary Kate and Ashley Olsen from "Full House."

Coolest part of the job: I get $5 an hour to have fun on the radio. I've also ridden in a limousine.

Favorite musical group: I like C&C Music Factory and the Spin Doctors.

What friends think: At lunch everybody asks, "How much do you make in a year?" and "When are you going on TV?" Kids from school call me up and listen to my show.

Celebrity perks: I've been on "Entertainment Tonight" and the "Today" show and the local news. It was fun!

Later, we caught Freedom Williams (formerly of C&C Music Factory) signing autographs and doing his Michael Jackson impersonation for the kids in the neighborhood. The Raiders' Anthony Smith wore a big smile and stayed seated the whole time we talked to him. We were glad, 'cause he's a big guy. We asked Anthony what the big difference is between playing football and softball. He said, "In softball, I can take something out there [a bat] and break it if I get mad." OK, Anthony, just keep smiling!

D.A. did some major sweet talking and got backstage at "The 1993 MTV Movie Awards." Yeah, you already know who all the winners were, but we partied with them! Between scarfing down Planet Hollywood pizzas, we heard and saw some rare goings-on that they didn't dare show on TV. In fact, if D.A. was going to give out backstage awards, here's what they would be:

BEST THROWING ARM: The hottest chili pepper, Anthony Kiedis. When an uppity reporter asked if the MTV award (a bronze statue of a popcorn box) was heavy, Anthony threw it at the guy! Yikes!

WEIRDEST FASHION SECRET: Pauly Shore. When reporters wanted to know where he gets his clothes, he replied, "Sometimes I go in my mom's closet."

WHOA!

Does Joey Lawrence ever have it bad for microphones. Put one in front of his face, and what happens? He sings for two and a half hours—until someone comes along to take the mike—or him—away. Rap, hip hop, dance, rock or heavy metal? Not necessarily. What really gets his vocal cords scorched is big band music. On his last birthday, Joey received the complete set of Glenn Miller. Which is not to say Joey lives in Nerdland. There are his 35 pairs of ripped jeans, his major popularity on "Blossom," a pop album called Joey Lawrence, and more than 5,000 fans letters a week. But even his parents are known to say, "Whoa!" At 17, Joey Lawrence, mega TV star, has to obey a weekday curfew.

Joey

What's the biggest difference between Joey Russo, your character on "Blossom," and Joey Lawrence?

A: Joey Russo is an airhead and I'm not. He loves sports and that's about it. He has no goals and just lives life. That's cool. It's one way to be. But I have strong aspirations. I'm always looking toward the future.

Do fans ever expect you to be dumb?

A: Some have said, "Are you that dumb?" I tell them, "I don't think it's possible." But Joey's not really dumb, he just doesn't have a lot of common sense.

What do you see when you look in the mirror?

A: I see a guy with a nose that's a little big who's got a couple of zits. Just like anybody else. I don't think I'm ugly, but I'm not as good-looking as some of the guys who are around.

Where did your fashion look come from?

A: Just from me. I like beat-up jeans and T-shirts. I don't care if they're in style or not. I started wearing them before "Blossom."

 After a day of acting and recording, what do you do to relax?

A: I go in my room and chill. If the Phillies are playing, I'll watch them. Or I'll read a book. I like personal stories or history books. Martin Luther King Jr. and Malcolm X is a great book.

 You're extremely close with your family. Would you ever consider moving out of the house when you turn 18?

A: No. When you turn 18, you don't need to move out. I love my family. We're a normal family: We fight, we yell, but we love each other to death. I want to keep that as long as I can.

What do you sing when you're in the shower?

A: Sometimes I might sing something silly like "The Love Boat" theme. But I mostly make things up. I thought up the chorus for "Nothing My Love Can't Fix" in the shower.

You always say "Whoa!" on "Blossom." Where did that come from?

A: In the second show, I just happened to go "Whoa" and it took off. I'm told there's a National Whoa Day in six states. They put huge Joey posters up and wear shirts tied around their waists.

What's the first movie you ever remember seeing?

A: Saturday Night Fever. I was things on the big-screen TV. But I'm getting older now, so I can deal with it better.

You like to wear motorcycle jackets but don't own a motorcycle. Why?

A: It's too dangerous. If I ever had a Harley, I would probably keep it at a ranch where I could drive it with no traffic and just zoom.

Are your two younger brothers ever jealous of the attention you're getting?

Chicago's a cold, windy city, but Jeremy says "no" to chill. He's into layering: a striped T under a "Chicago" multicolor jersey, topped off with his favorite Cross Colours denim jacket. Hey, most of your body heat escapes from your head. No problem—Jeremy's got his brain-toasting knit hat.

ABOUT THE STUFF: Long sleeve shirt from American Rag Youth, Los Angeles. "Chicago" multicolor jersey by Spike Boys. Jeans by Girbaud. Purple Converse shoes from Leeds. Knit toboggan hat by Industrial at Nana, Los Angeles.

Kanya slicks out in city cool because in Manhattan, you gotta look fine. Her red wool coat has a fake leopard hood and cuffs. (Always go fake with fur.) For her main act, she put together a white turtleneck with black bell bottoms by Blossom (yes, TV's "Blossom").

ABOUT THE STUFF:

The coat is by Cute Togs/ Ellene Fashion. Turtleneck by Jet Set. Dr. Martens and black belt from Nana. Bead necklace from Cutting Edge.

Gabe knows a winner and he dresses like one. Check out the cool striped sweater wrapped around his waist. He hits a home run with his hooded flannel sweatshirt and Bones baseball cap. Rah. Rah. Rah.

ABOUT THE STUFF:

T-shirt, blue corduroy shorts and green parka from American Rag. The sweatshirt is Hang Ten. The striped sweater is Jet Set. Blue nubuck Dr. Martens from Nana, Los Angeles.

ATLANTA

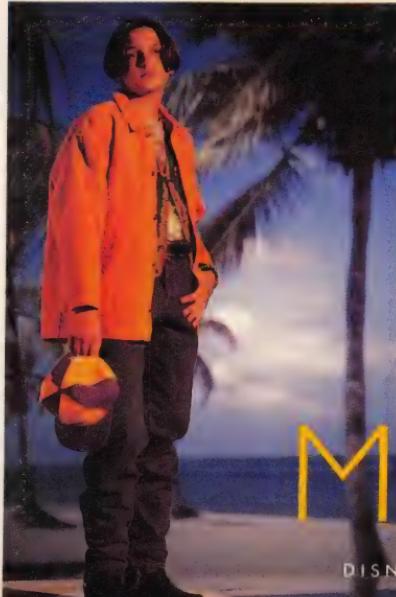

tropical grunge

Jonathan's recipe for grunge: Combine one pair overdyed purple jeans and one tie-dyed T-shirt. Mix a piece of primitive wear, the Guatemalan print vest, with a denim jacket. Add more heat and color: skull beads and bracelets.

ABOUT THE STUFF:

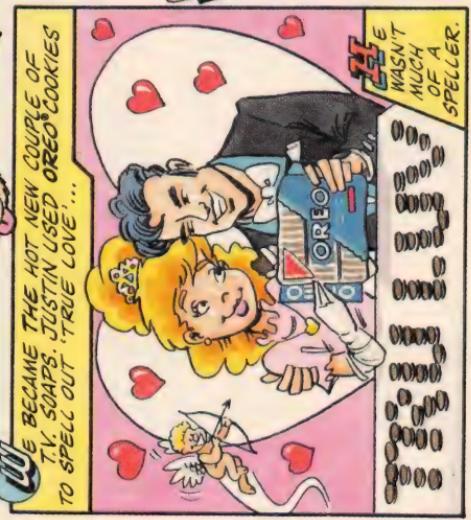

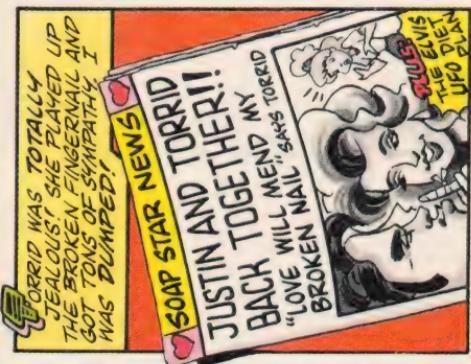

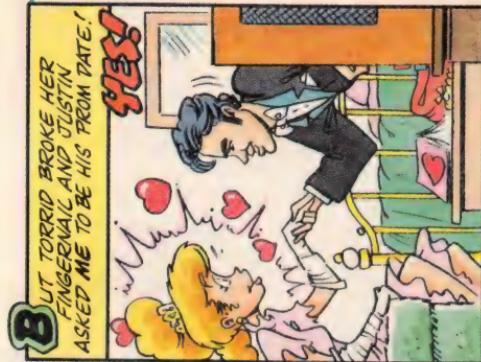

Jewelry, jeans and T-shirt by Cutting Edge. Jacket by Cross Colours. Vest by Paragraff. Black motorcycle boots from Nana, Los Angeles. Cap is by NBA Starter.

20 stories off the ground. If you do, you should hold on to something," Lynn says.

down

A few years ago Lynn noticed a skyscraper going up in her hometown of Pittsburgh. Watching ironworkers walk the narrow beams like tightrope artists, she decided to photograph them. "So I badgered their boss," she says, "until he agreed to teach me how to 'walk the iron'—balance on beams no more than 6 to 8 inches wide."

First Lynn practiced on lower floors. Then she climbed a 20-story ladder. "At the top there was just empty air," she says. "You get off the ladder and you're out in space on a beam."

When Lynn reached the top of the ladder, the sound of hammers clinking against iron stopped. Everybody watched her. She was afraid to move.

Then she thought, Lynn, you had better take a step or the pictures will never happen. You have to prove yourself right now. So she took a deep breath and stepped onto the beam. She walked until she reached a little wood platform in the center of the structure. She let out her breath. The clinking and the clanking started up again.

Lynn photographed the ironworkers for six months, and every day was dangerous. "Sometimes a worker would almost fall," she says. "Another guy would grab him, but nobody said anything. They'd sit him down on a beam till everybody was steady, and then they'd go on with their work."

doesn't mind being soaked. In fact, he spends most of his time getting deep in his work—as one of the world's most well-known underwater photographers.

glittered off the barracudas, and they looked like a solid wall of silver," David says.

trouble

being attacked by a barracuda isn't David's idea of a good time, but it makes for a great scary adventure. He was diving in the Bahamas, and a 5-foot-long fish slammed into his oxygen tank. "I felt a hard push behind me, turned around, and saw this huge barracuda," says David. "He'd hit my tanks so hard that all his front teeth came out. But if he'd hit me an inch to the right or left, I would have been hurt."

Sometimes, though, the shot is worth the danger. "I shot this picture near Kavieng Island near Papua New Guinea," David says. "I swam into a school of probably 1,000 barracudas. Suddenly, they began to circle me."

David wanted a picture of the barracuda circle with someone floating inside it, so he swam back to the boat and got another diver, Dinah, to jump in.

"I crossed my fingers and hoped the barracudas would still be there," David says. "They were, so I dove to the bottom and rolled on my back. Dinah swam right into the school and they began circling her. They circled around her three times and then disappeared."

David shot an entire roll of film in less than 30 seconds. "It's very difficult to get a human involved in a pattern of fish," David says. "You can watch them from a distance, but when you get near them, they scatter."

shoot

When National Geographic asked Zbigniew to shoot a whitewater rafting trip down the dangerous Colca River in Peru, he knew it could be a killer trip. Literally. "I'd been there before, and the last time a friend had drowned in the rapids," he says.

The Colca carves the deepest gorge on Earth—more than twice as deep as the Grand Canyon. "The team hiked for two days to get to the river 6,000 feet below. Once you're inside the canyon," Zbigniew says, "the only way out is by the river."

"It was late one evening, and we were close to the vortex—a 'hole' of churning, frothy water," Zbigniew recalls. "We decided to stop and make camp right above it."

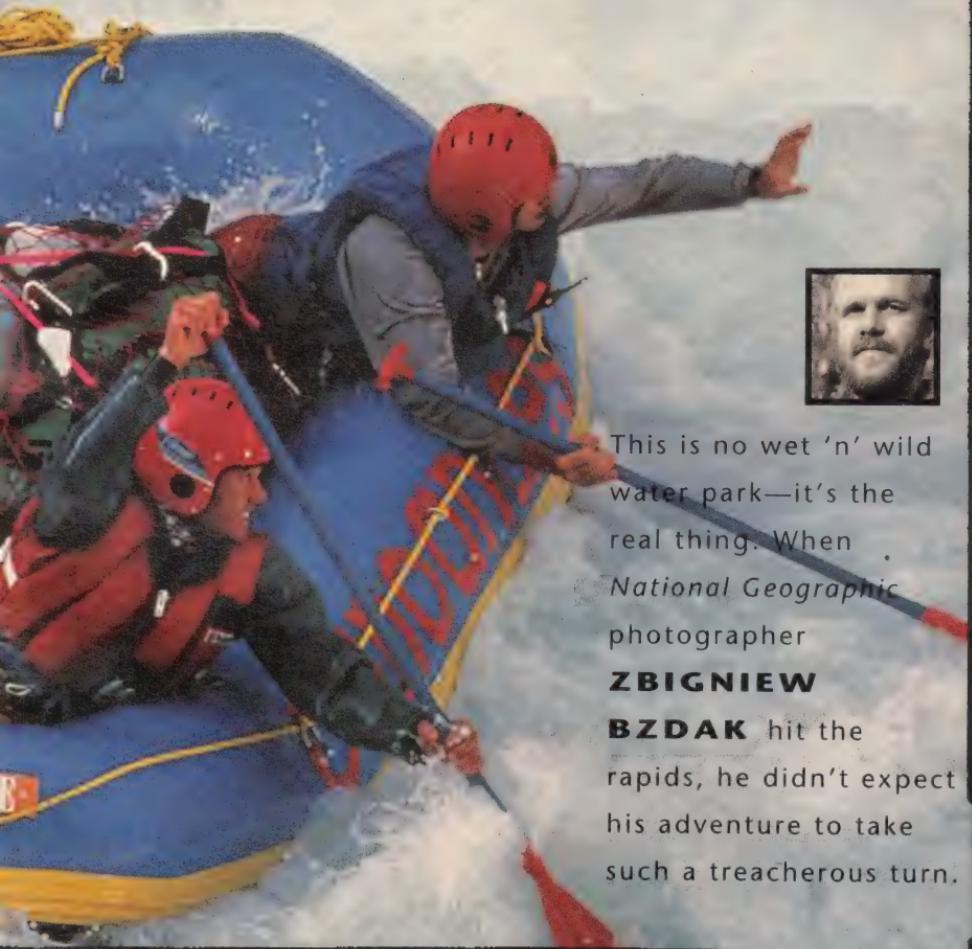

The next morning, Zbigniew set up his camera to photograph the rafts as they went through the vortex. He was looking through the viewfinder, ready to snap, when the raft began spinning crazily in the hole. "There was nothing I could do. Then I saw a rescue line coming from teammates on the shore," he says. "But there was still a chance somebody could drown. You never know until everybody pops up from the water."

Fortunately, everyone did pop up—including the two washed-out riders who were pulled to shore. Did that close call make Zbigniew afraid to get in a raft himself? "No, not really," he says. "Once you get on the raft, you just go with it."

"When I took the picture, two had been washed downstream," Zbigniew says.

the rapids

This is no wet 'n' wild water park—it's the real thing. When

National Geographic

BZDAK hit the rapids, he didn't expect his adventure to take such a treacherous turn.

"I like to take pictures of things most people won't ever have a chance to see. I get a kick when someone says, 'Hey, look at that!'" Loren says.

Loren charts a course high atop the Andes (above). The shot of Belém, Brazil (right), is "the best city picture I've ever gotten," Loren says.

Soaring above the jungle to take a picture of Belém, Brazil, a huge city in the Amazon rain forest, Loren had to lean out of the plane with his camera in hand. "The engine was screaming and the cold winds ripped at me," he remembers. It was so loud that he had to use hand signals to talk to the pilot.

Then two things went terribly wrong: Huge black clouds suddenly moved in and completely covered their landing base, and the pilot began to shiver and almost passed out. Just as Loren thought the plane would crash into the jungle, "a shaft of sunlight pierced the clouds and lit up the city," he remembers. Loren snapped one picture, and the pilot used the light to find the runway for a safe landing.

"That harrowing flight," he explains, "is pretty much what my life with a camera is all about."

This was the last photo Loren took before he was shot. Not being able to take photos "was worse than being shot," he says.

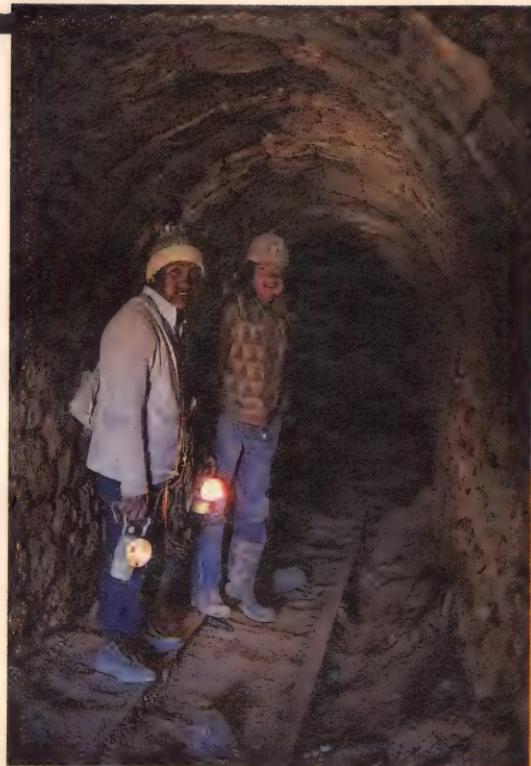

This calm photo (below) was followed by one wild day for Loren in 1989. As he focused his camera on some sea lions below a cliff, "I heard gunshots. Three masked men were running toward us, firing pistols," he says. His companion Willy shot one of them, and one of the men shot Loren in the leg. When he looked up, Willy was gone.

Then one of the gunmen dragged Loren to his car. "He pressed a gun to my head and pulled the trigger," Loren says. Click. Again—click. No bullets! As the man reached for more bullets, "I threw the car keys and ran." Instead of chasing him, the man grabbed the keys, and the three gunmen sped away—with all of Loren's camera equipment.

Terrified, he ran six miles to the nearest village and brought a rescue team back to the cliff, but they couldn't find Willy. When they returned to the police station, Willy was inside! He'd escaped and managed to make his way to the village, too.

Loren's two Brazilian guides (above) were absolutely necessary—it's easy to get lost in 20 miles of tunnel! But the guides led Loren only as far down as level 8, because "the tios hang out on level 9," Loren says.

"Adventures come out of fixes you deliberately get yourself into—and I usually get in trouble!"

nother time, Loren photographed miners in a Bolivian tin mine and got a serious warning. "The miners told me to watch out for the tios," Loren says. "They would ruin any pictures I took." These mischievous spirits, they explained, appeared as faceless miners in old clothes with the feet of roosters.

Deep in the mines, Loren laid his equipment on a shower curtain to keep it off the muddy floor. After taking pictures for a few hours, his cameras seemed to get heavier and heavier. "Then I just collapsed and sank into the slop," he says.

Had the tios tried to hurt him? The miners thought so. But "I was pretty sure it was a lack of oxygen that made me pass out," Loren says. After he was carried out, he realized he'd left a roll of film on the shower curtain.

"I asked someone to get it for me," Loren explains. "Word came back that all they found was the curtain...with giant rooster footprints in the mud under it."

mining for shots

Photos have to be aware of temperature changes so their cameras don't glitch during an important shot. When Loren McIntyre went down in the mines in Peru, he knew the change from freezing cold outside to 100-degree heat in the mine shafts would make the lenses fog up. (Think of what happens to your glasses when you go into a warm building on a cold day.) His solution: He stuck hot-water bottles in with his equipment. No foggy pictures!

Would you want to balance 20 stories above the pavement with a load of camera equipment in your hands? Lynn

Johnson didn't. "I just slung a couple cameras around my neck and put the film in my pocket, instead of carrying a bag," she explains. "Your weight has to be absolutely centered—you can't have a heavy bag hanging off one shoulder."

shot sky high strapped in

When Zbigniew Bzdak wanted to get some fish-eye views of his kayaking adventure, he put regular cameras in waterproof boxes and tied them to the raft for in-your-face river shots. Other times he used a custom-made remote-controlled camera built for him by National Geographic. "I set it up on the raft and trigger it from the shore," he says.

Photographers who go to weird and dangerous places have to be ultra-careful with their cameras—or the pictures don't happen.

David Doubilet

takes no chances with his cameras underwater. "You can't change lenses or film underwater, so I end up towing around eight or 10 fully equipped cameras," he explains. David stashes the cameras along the ocean floor and grabs them when he needs them. Has he ever left any behind? "No," says David, "although once when I was in the Galapagos Islands, a couple of sea lions did have some fun playing with one of my cameras."

They gave the camera back, though, once they got bored!

Two ultra-tiny guys are just about tied for the title of world's smallest land mammal.

Hog-nosed bats (also called bumblebee bats 'cause they're so small) have a wingspan that's a little over six inches wide and they weigh about as much as a penny: .062-.071 ounces.

The white-toothed pygmy shrew looks kinda like a mouse with a long nose. At two to three inches long, pygmy shrews barely tip the scales at .052-.09 ounces.

MC² and I plucked a hair off each of our heads (ouch!) and looked at them under a microscope. My hair's curly, and its magnified shape is totally flat. MC² has straight hair. Under the microscope, we saw that each hair was round. The flatter each strand is, the curlier your hair will be.

Swirling, Twirling Whirlpools

Dr. Paul Zahl was out for a big spin. He and an assistant sat in a small fishing boat, just 30 feet away from the infamous Charybdis whirlpool off the coast of Italy. He could see its powerful, swirling, funnel-like center. He could hear water gurgling as it was pulled down the spiral. And with any sudden movement of the boat, his assistant would find his oars dipping into empty space where there had once been water.

Still, Dr. Zahl wanted to get a closer look at Charybdis. He stood up and was nearly thrown off the jolting boat. Suddenly the outer edge of the whirlpool caught the boat in its current! The little boat pitched and tossed until the men finally managed to reverse their direction and pull away. That was as close a look as Dr. Zahl ever wanted to get.

Dr. Zahl wasn't trying to prove that whirlpools were dangerous to people. He

Whirl-Famous POOLS

Charybdis isn't the only famous whirlpool. Edgar Allan Poe wrote about a violent whirlpool off the coast of Norway in his 1841 book, A Descent into the Maelstrom. But the Maelstrom was around long before that. Some people say that in 1645 the Maelstrom's waters caused such turbulence that stone walls fell and villagers' homes were destroyed and sucked into the raging waters. Even today when the Maelstrom hits full force, villagers get a little nervous: You can hear the powerful roar from three miles away.

SCOOP

already knew that. (Although whirlpools can't swallow large ships, one river whirlpool in Bangladesh sank a boat with 26 people on it.)

What Dr. Zahl did want to prove was that whirlpools can also mean spinning death to deep-sea creatures. Charybdis was strong enough to drag sea animals a half-mile away from their homes.

—Catherine McCafferty

Whirlpools begin with some kind of a collision between two forces:

1. Water currents flowing in different directions.
2. An outgoing tide meeting an incoming tide.
3. A water current hitting a weird-shaped bank.
4. An ocean current running into rocks, tides or different water depths.
5. Strong winds pushing against tidal currents.

After the collision, the water swirls around faster and faster until it's spinning wildly. The resulting whirlpool menaces boats on the surface, deep-sea creatures on the ocean floor and anything that has the bad luck to be in between.

It's a Swirl, It's a Drain, It's a...Tornado?

one thing in common: danger.

Actually, every ocean is a whirlpool, with giant circles that move water from continent to continent. You can even find whirlpools in your house: Did you ever see water swirling down the drain in the sink or bathtub? Here's how to make a whooshing whirlpool in your own home:

Just Add Water

All you need is an empty plastic soda bottle (remove label so you can see inside), water and a sink. Fill the bottle with water, then quickly turn it upside down over the sink. As you hold the bottom of the bottle, turn the neck until the water inside starts spinning. Then you can stop turning the bottle; the water will keep spinning by itself.

DRAGON WAGON

The Dragon Wagon is used to transport the fire-breathing dragon to the Dark Dragon's Den where Majisto casts his magic spells. Two guards and their horses are included to prevent the dragon from escaping and terrorizing the kingdom.

- Q. According to legend, what characteristics do dragons share with fish?

A. They both have scales and sleep with their eyes open.

DARK DRAGON'S DEN

The Dark Dragon's Den is a hidden cave where Majisto keeps his dragon. Three of Majisto's guards protect the den and prevent brave Black Knights from entering the den and slaying the dragon. Majisto controls the dragon by casting spells from his tower atop the Dark Dragon's Den. The den also has a secret passageway that allows Majisto to escape in times of trouble.

- Q. Other than strong walls, what else protected castles from invaders?
- A. Moats, boiling water or oil, and bows and arrows.

MAJISTO'S MAGICAL WORKSHOP

Majisto's Magical Workshop is the place where Majisto creates potions and casts spells to control his fire-breathing dragon. Featured in the workshop are sparkling gemstones and a secret potion scroll that Majisto uses to create his magic spells. The workshop pivots so it can close when Majisto is making secret potions. A guard is included to protect Majisto and his workshop.

- Q. According to legend, what ingredients did wizards like Majisto use to produce their secret potions?

A. Berries, roots, and wood.

FIRE BREATHING FORTRESS

The Fire Breathing Fortress is Majisto's impenetrable castle where he hides treasure collected from the village. To scare away intruders, the fortress features a dragon's head that pivots and drops stones on unwanted guests. Only the bravest Black Knights have dared to enter the fortress to retrieve the treasure and return it to its rightful owners. If a Black Knight successfully enters the fortress, he must still battle three guards and the fierce dragon to find Majisto's secret dungeon where the treasure is hidden.

- Q. How many Dragon Masters sets are available in 1993?
- A. Four. Be sure to check them out at your favorite toy store this fall.

She gets up at dawn to jog. She does sit-ups and push-ups and practices karate. Is Jessica Little training for "American Gladiators"? Nope. She's a world-champion surfer who's getting ready for the ultimate wave.

HEY THERE,

surfer girl

Jessica caught the call of the waves when she was 12 years old, hanging out at the beach, watching her twin brother and his friends surf. "I went to watch him one day and fell in love with surfing," she remembers. "I had to do it!"

The guys made fun of her at first, but they didn't laugh for long. Her experience in gymnastics made her much stronger than she looked. "The first time I got on a surfboard I stood right up. My brother couldn't believe it," she says.

She got so good so fast that the next year, at the ripe old age of 13, she entered her first surfing contest—against adult women. By 17, Jessica had become the U.S. amateur female champ. And now, at 18, she's turning pro. "Sometimes I compete against guys, but it's mostly girls. There are tons of girls who surf," she says.

One of the best perks Jessica gets as a world-class competitor is the trips to extremely cool places. "There are contests all over the world. I've been to places like Australia, Hawaii, the Cook Islands and Bali," she says.

But more than great waves waited for Jessica in Bali. "I was surfing with a friend in Bali," she says. "People on the shore started whistling and waving at us. We thought they were ready to leave. Then my friend saw something huge in the water and we paddled to shore as fast as we could. Later they said there was a big shark out there with us."

Other than hungry sea life, surfing's not very dangerous, according to Jessica. "Once I dislocated my shoulder. I've also been on waves where I was so scared I thought my heart would pop out of my chest," she says. "But the worst danger is other surfers. You really have to watch out—they're kooks!"

costumes they've designed for Michael Jackson's concerts, videos and public appearances.

DRESSING THE KING

OF POP

AS WE REPORTED

in our June issue, Michael Jackson loses up to 10 pounds of water weight during one performance. That could be a problem for Michael's costume designers Michael Bush and Dennis Tompkins, but they say it's really no sweat. "The clothes have to look way cool, sure, but they also have to be able to soak up all that water," Bush says.

Bush met Michael eight years ago when he worked on the costumes for Michael's 3D Disney film Captain EO. Now he and his partner create the clothes Michael wears onstage and offstage. "Michael goes through a lot of clothes," Bush says. "On the Dangerous tour he changed 14 times during each show."

They also design costumes for the dancers, musicians and even the concert security guards.

Offstage, "Michael is pretty casual," Bush says. He likes black pants, loafers and either a V-neck or corduroy shirt. Onstage, though, he's anything but laid-back. On his Bad tour, he performed "Thriller" in a coat covered with 2,700 tiny white lights! That jacket had almost three miles of wires.

A coat of cutlery: Michael Jackson's "dinner jacket."

and weighed more than 20 pounds.

Bush, his partner and Michael always try to top themselves with outrageous ideas for costumes. Once Bush noticed weird grille work on an old 1938 Ford. He liked it so much that he worked the design into a jacket.

Sometimes Michael stumps them. "One day Michael called and said, 'There's something in the world that every child can relate to. What is it?' Then he hung up," Bush says. "We thought and thought, and finally came up with a simple answer—a knife, fork and spoon set."

So they covered a coat with tiny utensils and showed it to Michael. "He loved it," Bush says. "He said, 'This will be my dinner jacket.'"

"One of the scariest things about working for Michael," Bush says, "is when I'm working on a jacket and I think, Wow, the whole world is going to see this."

Like the black leather jacket with the letters CTE that Michael Jackson wore for his famous Oprah Winfrey interview. Bush got dozens of calls asking, "What do those initials stand for?" Bush laughs before revealing the answer.

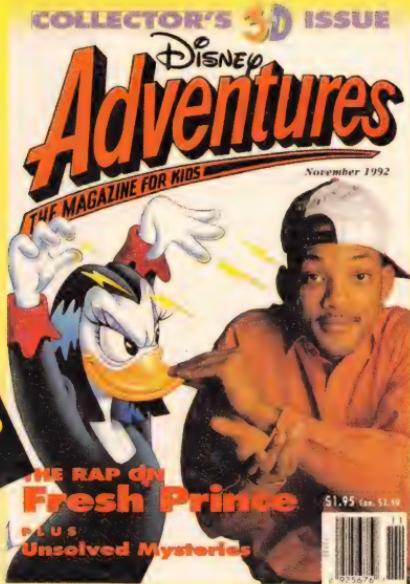

"Nothing," he says.
"Absolutely nothing at all."

THE HUMANS

One Player

Game Boy

Imagine flipping back in time to a prehistoric world filled with a bunch of Neanderthals. Using your 20th-century smarts, teach the cave people how to survive and find the spear. Yes, it's you against the dinosaurs! This strategy-type game is filled with fun puzzles.

Tip: To obtain the spear, you must form a human ladder until the top guy can grab it. Teamwork wins every time.

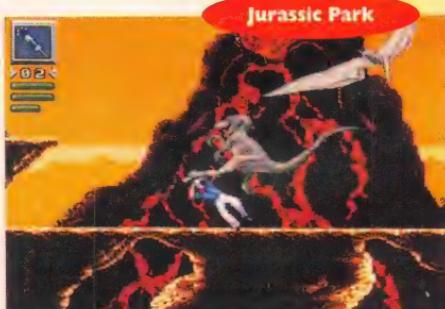

JURASSIC PARK

One or Two Players

Sega Genesis

The real-life dinosaurs have once again escaped. Chaos and terror reign. You can control either paleontologist Dr. Grant (who doesn't like the idea of being turned into a dinoburger) or a Raptor dino (who wants to escape the park island). This 16-bit game features superior graphics and non-stop action.

Tip: You must learn each dino's attack behavior: Raptors have smarts; Dilophosaurs spit toxic liquid; Compsys move super fast; and T-Rex is a Kong-sized terror.

KIRBY'S ADVENTURE

One Player

NES

Life is a total bummer in Dreamland since the Dream Spring dried up. So it's Kirby to the rescue. He must explore seven areas of Dreamland to get the spring flowing again. The challenges of this colorful cart are no snap of the wrist.

Tip: To get past certain Boss characters, Kirby sucks in their weapons, then spits them back out toward the Boss. Finding a gold star will warp him to another area.

SUPER MARIO ALL-STARS

One or Two Players

Super NES

Amazing! Super Mario Bros. 1, 2 and 3 are now all together on one cart with new animated backgrounds and sound effects. The super bonus is a fourth game—Super Mario Bros.: The Lost Levels. It's the most challenging Mario game ever.

Tip: At the end of Super Mario Bros. 3's World 1-3, stand on a white block over the bushes near the finish until you fall. Then proceed to the secret Toad House to find a Warp Whistle.—Jason Rich
